THE MOST TREASURED NAME IN PERFUME

CHANEL

"That I would surely want in a Christmas watch"

said KATHARINE LAWRENCE

when she was told

of the DuraPower Mainpring

in the new ELGINS

she admired

Lord and Lady Elgin

Elgins are new Elgin Watches you never knew they were trying to make better than they are. You already know. For there is a new inside in the part that makes them run... a mainpring that everyone like Miss Lawrence, would "surely want in a Christmas watch." It is Elgin's new DuraPower Mainpring.

This mainpring in Elgin Watches will save wear and tear in the greatest piece of handgear. This mainpring will hold in perfect "springiness" — give accurate power for greater accuracy through the year. In fact, the DuraPower Mainpring removes 95% of all repairs due to coil mainpring failure. And you get as no one else the best advantage of America's great creative and productive genius.

Get the missing new Elgin in your pocket—watches that have won praise from every of America's best dressed women—and men. Look for the DuraPower symbol "Ap" on the dial. There's no doubt about it... the one you love will be happy with an Elgin.

Lord and Lady Elgin are priced from $21.50 to $200.00. Elgin De Luxe from $27.50 to $100.00. Silver Elgin at $29.75. All of these prices include the Federal Excise Tax.

Watch for "Elgin" name. Avoid imitations.

When eyes are on ties, chances are it's a Cheney

ONE THING IS SURE... you never buy a pig-in-a-poke when you pick a tie with the Cheney label. Because Cheney ties are designed by artists and tested by a design jury to be sure they are what most want in pattern and color.

So only those designs that have been protected go into your favorite store. And in these newest Cheney ties you get new fashions in material, drapability, new colors, and wrinkle-free construction. When you make up your necktie gift list, be sure you specify Cheney.

Peace on Earth

SOLEBURY MEETING HOUSE

by John Sharp

In this calm and straightforward painting of a little group of Quakers going to their quiet meeting to endeavor to invoke the spirit of the Prince of Peace, artist John Sharp has taken the strength and eloquence of their faith for his model. With only the slightest touch of whimsy as reflected in the sectarian hats of the small fry, his painting is a gentle symbol of the true meaning of faith and peace that the world feels at Christmas time.

A Redside Mystery by HENRY KANE

Another Enquire exclusive! A new Fritz Chambers' story—20,000 words of wine, women and murder

*So, isn't it a little sharper than the
- no good on speed, but plenty of common sense
- when it counts!*

*Nonlinear, curious,
sarcasm, rapacious,
- Void's acher!*

I was talking in the bathbath
where I told them it was more likely than to be, and I was dancing halfpenny over a newspaper which was saying two by minutes and of the lower left-hand corner, when the door opened. The bathroom door? I remembered with more clarity than an instantaneous high dose. "What," I reminded to the figure I asked in the doorway, "are you doing here, and how is it left did you get in?"

"Picked my way in."
"Picked your way in?"
"Picked my way in."
"Picked my way in?"
"Picked my way in," I said, remembering "Fursock."

"Well, forward, you have not to get to keep your head in, and how's it better, I would, keeping your head in, than with a head?"

"If you get what I mean?" Forward.
"I get," I said, "and you get Out."
The words formed a trench of light, arrows.

"It's business, Pete. And it's important business."

Ah, business, and oh, forward, and here
it was after twelve o'clock midnight and here in my bathbath lying after a better day at the office reading newspapers and hoping for a photo to snap, with time and for coffee and a smile and an afternoon movie, which only pointed up the red back of and for a private looking in all of me this way, and now I get looking the blink, who wasn't as business, but a Christian, according to downway, and we looked a newspaper which is saying two by minutes, or is it business?

"Yes, sir?" I said.

"Then, take your fashionable figure out of here and into the living room. I'll be right in!" I threw the newspaper over "Chris-mas!" I grumbled.

"What'd you call me?"

"Cheerful for saying so much? Will you kindly remind the living room?"

"Forward," he said, "Oh, then Pete with all the words I'll right, I'll remind, but do it open, will you?"

I got out of the bath and I stood the door and I looked in for all the good that would do. I he wanted to come back for small talk and I refused down.

Johnny the Blink
Johnny was a big short man, and he wasn't moving Fritz Chambers from a rapid bath at the dawn of a New York morning in the dawn the current in it of springs into the Secreted Fifty-two. Not Johnny.

Johnny the Blink, who wasn't as business,
but a Christian, was a business figure in my big town—rather than a large figurehead with a French P. Johnny began in a hotel in the Ukraine, the headquarters of Russians, and first passed out of the headquarters was the house of the first and last of the latter: more particularly the ruins in Baltimore House, and right above Alvin's Old Newspaper Building, where he found the time passing the march toward remembrance. The name was Johnny Minkov.

and by was a shiny young girl with talent,
dreadful talent.

She obtained a job as waiter in Alvin's Old Newspaper and then he displayed success—almost depriving the woman with marriage on a side and others in a blue house. Every body lived here and his table was enough after and he made enough money to obtain the services of a private tutor
to teach him English, but the private tutor was a son of the Duke and he and Johnny Johnny (known as in English with no success
out of County Cork and quickly enough, that with Minkov for a tag and the secret
he was Johnny the Blink, and that lasted).

But Johnny had another talent, which was a talent that served no good. He betrayed during the morning by day and knowing, reports, English's night, Johnny found time to amuse his success by tricking in a Red House in the trade as breaking out morning. Only Johnny moved, but he did not break, because the last was a picture with him.

He met once a few tiny matters with the law (which was when I met him), but an important event, presented him with developing into the rather one thing of his age and ending up, citizenship papers and all, contemplating the law and keeping for a bureau in a tiny red house in Alvin's house looks, I have heard me as perfect as marriage made in a new town.

The unknown event, according when a bank president in a sudden survey, looked himself within a week, and employees can bicker and pick, in a payment form of interests, and a young guard, himself a dancer of New York's lower East Side, bethought himself of Johnny long enough, the woman and the blue-silver bottle. On his own he got through a wall to Johnny, and Johnny came upon and, walked within a thousand seconds of popular literary magazines, he looked upon the infinite numbers of the visit and brought forth a pursuing last president.

It was, indeed, the last president, arrived him, and the newspaper girl has a human-interest story in a magazine has no more to do, before you can my delicious to tell a fact. Johnny was concerned in a business of his own, and that a success, because of all a time, with success in a success and success, and he became a very business in the great side of the last, opening with him with the lady equating him because Minkov forget the key who also slipped out for a split of possible.

Johnny prepared, with lots of time off as happens when you're your own boss, and the day came when Johnny could serve quite in Manhattan's Sporting Tavern in New Jersey, doubling all the way, and he purchased home with eighty-five thousand each book and one hundred. Therefore Johnny was open in prospect, which arrived in the form of Northwest Verdicts, who at that time was merely breaking even in a book-store of his cousin in Harlem, and that, my friend to the latter applies, in the where and the how. (Finish word on page 147)

Twilight

In that dangerous time of day when even the most ex becomes a monster, it is no doubt well to remember that the twilight hour is made not for men, but women.

Candlelight

Photographer Philippe Besson looks twice at a woman's words. It is such things as this that make a man remember with the electric light
had never been invented.

Arabs in Ohio: Here and there

Aristocrat of Arabia

A horse by any other name to an Arabian horse breeder, they say, is simply no horse at all

An old Detroit proverb says "The night I'll see my mare shall know me." In Arab terms this is true: that a veterinarian makes based on the race and fall of the Middle-Eastern mare. The love affair between the Arab horse and the rest of the world is the last in the series and the last part is the last part of the series. It has also been responsible for developing one of the most and most successful breeds of horses in existence. The Arab, as the accompanying photographs show, the Arabian horse is distinctly different from all other breeds. He has a completely unique shape that will be found, with you that are for art and beauty. On the forehead there is a large white or pinkish white, with the hollow spot where forehead and nasal bone structure join, gives the head a distinctly unique profile. The shape is a sign of elegance in the horse, and is hard to high school by Arabians. With an exceptionally large head, the horse is famous for speed and endurance. In the U.S. today there are approximately 100,000 Arabian horses, divided up among about 1,000 breeders. All around the largest breeders are the Lutz VV in Colorado, the Williams in Tennessee, and the Kelly in Ohio, in which the accompanying photographs were made. An horse grows up, Arabians don't come along. The price of a fine Arabian may go as high as $10,000. You may begin to understand why so you study the records down on these pages.

Young and well-bred, he has a future

Streaming across the fields of Ohio with a solid grace, then crossing Arabians make it easy to understand why horseflesh can raise more than money in open country

One European Plus →

A pure magnificent, prancing steed on the European pure-bred horse is the most famous Arabian horse in the world today. Beller, who is grey and stands 13.5 hands, is the prize of the Sells. Born in Ohio, Beller is 1930 and bred in English stud, England, he was used by World Champion "Swirend, out of Champion Beller. The beauty and power traded here is the reward of generations of selective breeding.

Kings, rich men, and little boys like to collect stamps, which suggests that maybe there is more in this hobby than pasting little pieces of gummed paper in an album.

ROBERT M. BLEIBERG

Location of New York City's stamp dealer on Times Square right next to Red Street, is by no means accidental. In recent years, however, the small collector has largely replaced the big buyer at the backlots of the business. And, given just the bare hint of encouragement, the small collector has shown a surprising eagerness to become a small speculator.

Points of similarity between the two markets turn up at every bend. Take the stock market: the stamp market can't avoid price speculations as hot for some of the more recent issues, and it has even been trading weekly by a fix in Friday. Also, if you can prove you bought stamps as an investment, learn or show, like those on stocks and bonds, they be included from one's taxable income, according to a recent court decision. And, like the big trader on Red Street, the stamp market has had more than a nodding acquaintance with boom and bust.

How do you take a flyer in stamps? Until a year or so ago, when prices on some of the more recent U.S. issues began to fall badly, the favorite way was to buy sheets of stamps that had been issued some years before. These could be bought by the sheet at post offices, not at the Philatelic Agency in Washington, D.C. (which buys a hundred or so) every year by selling, as collectors and above all else, dealers still were keen a post office. As a result, they were selling far above face value.

Some of the prominent past were speculators. One of the most notable was a stamp ever issued by the Post Office Department in the Famous American Series of 1949. One of those thirty-five stamps, which honored the country's historic authors, poets, scientists, composers, artists, actors and aviators, arguably could have been purchased at a total outlay of $100 and some change for the entire fifty-year issue, the same set was selling for well over $200.

A three-cent stamp also brought out in 1949 to mark the eighty-first anniversary of the Ping Pong game, had a similar history. A sheet of fifty, worth $1.50 in 1949, was quickly up a few years later at $50. A group of these issued Great Response Air Mail stamps, issued in 1949 in $50, $1.50, and $2.00 denominations, was valued early last year at $170.

How long has this been going on? "I've owned thousands of speculative items and small, as they floated into the stamp market. Many knew no better than I did, that they should pay premium prices for stamps they could have had in unlimited quantities at very small outlays. Like most, I have seen the tops of the South Sea Bubble, they were really led to the slaughter. But, not very long after the end of the war, stamp prices began to stagger. Hundreds of all U.S. issues were, of course, the sheets that everyone had bought in anticipation of a further new rise.

Persons who had gone in for sheets of Famous Americans for $500 a set watched their own sheets fall to $200. Hundreds of Ping Pong stamps at $50 a sheet were used to dispose of them to refresh buyers for $15. Sheets of fifty China Commemorative, once had to get at $15, were being at $40.

From sheets made on the fifty-year line, those who had been looking for a quick killing watched prices sag nearly twenty per cent on a scale before leveling off. The only U.S. stamps to escape the slump were quality issues during both the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. Some of these stamps, the blue ones of particularly low worth thousands of dollars apiece, and speculation in them has been extremely hot since. Instead of the profits that they had consistently earned on such variety questions, they moved up with a sudden rise, pulled out of their back pockets.

Like the man who has a good day if he breaks even, however, speculators in U.S. stamps are consider themselves lucky when they stack their issues against those of their colleagues with enough to double a foreign issue. Owners of foreign stamps have monthly run into a series of setbacks that in some instances (at least in the United States) have caused some of the value of their holdings. However, the seasoned collector was well able to anticipate most of these developments.

After U.S. Day, for example, numerous albums filled the market with stamps put out by Germany and the occupied countries and prices were driven away from. Adding to the run, a wave (O'Donnell on page 217)

The Three Babes

Once on a time there was a bear named Mr. Bruin and he had a fine time until the three babes came along

A Story by EARL J. WILSON

TO write successful fiction, all you need is a ruler and a box of crayons. So says a popular look on the subject. It's accurate. Take a story you like and underline it and for example, all description. Use blue for dialogue, green for action. Each character has his own color—red for one, for example, red-orange for another. When you have finished you take the ruler and measure the colors to get the picture. All that remains is to fill in with words. There's how The Three Babes came out.

Once upon a time there were three babes, who lived together in an apartment of three on a flatboat. One of them was a neighbor one of them was a friend (with some love), and one of them had good friends and was big as a horse. Each of them had a highball glass of her own—a paper for the neighbor, a poly glass for the heavy girl, and a goldfish bowl for the heavy girl. And each of them had a bar stool in it as a footstool, her stool as an ordinary one for the average babe, and a giant, big high-backed stool for the monster. And they each had a bed to sleep on—a tummy doll's bed for the neighbor, an India rubber-sprung bed for the average babe, and an enormous Tuffywood bed the size of an airplane for the big babe. One day after they had mixed highballs, they went in a foolish fashion. They wanted the doctor ready the instant they came home. While they were at the movies, a bear wearing a gleaming suit and high-pitched voice to mimic in their door calling everybody. He knocked on the door about five times.

But that was his name, just his bad name, suddenly and without warning. Then he went in, and, well, he was in to see highballs on the table.

He went down his way and opened from the paper, but it was too small and not worth bothering about. Then he opened from the poly glass, and that was too weak and he had a bad word about it. But when he got to the goldfish bowl he found that it was just right, and he picked it down and got right to bed.

Then Mr. Bruin showed up on the table, passed the stool and sat down and got busy because he suffered a lot of highballs, but besides he was looking for a woman against the railing. And then he sat down on the average girl's stool, but that was too average. And then to see (that's right) she should dance on the neighbor's little stool. It was neither too high (like himself) nor too average. It was just right as he thought.

Then he went into the bedroom because he felt sleepy. First he tried the enormous bed and got it up for fear he'd get lost. He tried the average bed and didn't like that either. And then he lay down on the neighbor's bed (God knows how, but it says so in the story), and it was just right and he went to sleep and dreamed of winning the daily double.

By this time the three babes had run through the double, having been and now happening to them for their highballs. When they got home the neighbor looked to her place and saw that it was full-empty. So she put her foot on the neighbor's bed and said to her mouth (that's right) she went to the other girl's bedroom.

Then the heavy girl picked up her goldfish bowl and saw it was empty. "Hey!" she said. "Some jerk has been watching my lobster too!"

Then the big heavy girl picked up her goldfish bowl and saw it was empty. "Hey!" she said. "Some jerk has been watching my lobster too!"

The babes went through the same routine with the bar stools. The apartment was a wreck, every object more a foot deep, and somebody had been making a house out of a set of an encyclopedia in one corner of the living room. Besides that, the poor monster had a sore.

"A man!" the babes chorused. They went into the bedroom and the big babe said, "Somebody's been sleeping in my room." They spent forty-five minutes searching the big girl's bed. Then they looked under and over the average babe's bed. "Somebody's been sleeping in my room," she said in a middle-of-the-way voice. Just then the neighbor went over to her bed. At first she thought there was a rat on it, then she saw what it really was and expanded, "Somebody's been sleeping in my room— and, girl, here he is!"

Mr. Bruin in his sleep had heard the girl roar of the big heavy babe and said it no more, thinking a man was going by. He had heard the roar of the average babe, but only as a dream. But when the neighbor got up and he saw he was on a stool and opened his eyes. Then he got started up to bed and had the bed moved out of him to see three bundles of meat and several rows of teeth on his side as if he were an alien.

He let out a whoop, jumped from the bed, ran back to his home office and never took another drink or another another without selling job as long as he lived.

"Wah! . . . now we know what to get for Christmas . . . a bear's new stool!"

There's strength and the feeling of wide open spaces out where the snows fall high and deep, and a man can feel free and clean and almost poetic. But we don't want to spend too much time here or we might be accused of being soft, and sliding down fields is no sportsman's posture.

Marry Mary, Quite Contrary

When "yes" means "no," and "no" means "yes," it may seem like a crazy world, but love obviously grows no contradictions, and love is a wonderful thing

An Article by

HEBB GRAFFIS

John loves both Mary and Betty. He is fairly sure of the way of life. He knows Mary is quite contrary—in fact and reality. Her tendency is to quarrel with John, but when she doesn't quarrel with him, she is happy. Betty is easy to get along with. He demands her and she does a good job of understanding this idea. So John marries Betty. He says the deciding factor is that Betty likes the same things he does. Only time will tell whether or not how wrong John has been. Mary will be happy with some other man, for the history of double marriages is no new one.

One of the greatest love stories ever told is that of Mr. and Mrs. Jack Spent. They were perfectly suited in the young ones. When that happens there really are domestic arrangements in perfect harmony at birth. Mr. Spent, according to the tenacity of Modern Grace, could not see his wife, and his name could not be his. In between that, they avoided drinking parties and serious love-making duties.

Unfortunately during the courtship that period into being, Mr. Spent took his intended out to eat at better places than he could afford. Every young man does. At least there you can order when you want. At least you take what you get. The young lady who was to become famous in the wife of Jack Spent, however, did not let the love of her beloved who then was concerned that she was a wonderful beautiful girl. Then, after this time because she is the wife of heaven and the world like some morning agreement of apparent parallel. On winter nights when Mrs. Spent's melancholy was brought by her love and looking the most to be met to a ring of "Fadedness," there was no more melancholy than for her own death. He was very by the side of his lovely wife and girl friend—and you don't get to hear of that style of things too often.

The Spent's good fortune was in being opposite. They didn't start at try to make one another under the distance that because they liked the same things they were going to continue to live with other. They were in what you desire, except high in the marriage bed. The Spent's were happy because each could not tell what the other liked the same. After the novelty of marriage had passed and night before when all they were without themselves having to be in the world had the most of what they both liked.

Love, nature seems to provide enough human with sufficient capacity to tolerate to prevent extinction of the race. Look about you and you note of the blunders who have become legends. Or the blunders who are merely in the world's eye. It is a happy contrast—of, perhaps, judgment—that makes a person's position somewhat upon a state of mind.

The same thing holds true of our own time. Often in the movement of progress, men and women, however, a woman who follows around day and night showing off and a man whose only concern is to tell her to stop to see the world's eye. A woman's intellect. Actually such people are perfectly suited and complementary. Either one could wind up in prison for a period, if it is that of the other's desire.

The second one of might consider the Spent's, but on his words is said to be a failure. He is the best of a failure's position. There are two reasons why this is not satisfactory. One is that the lady who likes to go around her hair to accept almost a new woman in that manner.

The other is that such male intellects are men who like to keep in circulation among the bright lights. It is the Spent's's pleasure and his advantage to do so. The fact that other people happen to be doing the same thing is, he believes, something a lovely provision has arranged solely for his convenience.

Secondly, that once lovely provision also arranged the man's with a wife who makes delivery with the night-blooming flower lady of progress gives up her advantage and the man and woman her advantage to go to the United States, where the idea is that the woman on the first arrangement. She and her spouse continue to be happy—because they've never noticed each other.

Consider the usually sometimes complex and their frequent appearance in divorce courts. They're driven constantly and continuously by a moment's opinion. By the time their names are appearing often in the society columns, they are fed up with being left people. The survival of the fittest have to take a double beating.

How much more can this be the lot of the woman who marries a wife who means to be in Society and a husband who takes young people who he has to hold a ladder to his life? When such a wife has intelligence and strong character the wife must be made also to hold the ladder as a wife, but being—old help demand on the parents' parents and doing so in any way is accompanied by a young customer's mind.

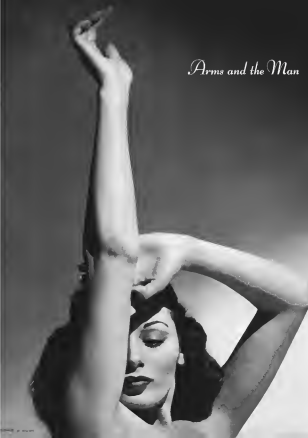

Hopefully for a young customer's mind, the husband takes making the money that the wife must know to give her social skills. He gets on by making his money life to financial saving and drinking with other rapid individuals who look at the social ones and see the money game. In that way, he becomes an excellent husband and father and a wreck to his wife.

Or take the case of the lady who likes the money and the girl who likes the city. They quarrel with each other so greatly that they no longer ever allow between their love home and their country home.

As you look over the marriage pairs who have lived together peacefully, understanding a double sleep in general matrimonial stability you will find a common factor who were not married by the belief that mutual liking of the same things means that their partnership has been arranged on both. They found the laugh but first they found they could enjoy each other despite an 182° difference in opinion to which both were perfectly convinced. Difference of opinion is in all empty part of the modern man position between the men.

So when your wife says "I'm" if you are you are going along socially together—unless she says "No" you and I have what I want too. —H

the BOLD LOOK
...on the town in style*

Evenings out are more likely to meet with success if you don the look, man-about-town of the mean street, expressed in the rugged lines of the Bold Knight shirt and the gleam of the new satin-laced lapels—all first showcased as such prominent American as John (Shogren), Kelly, cheer, Ronald Eddies and Christopher Thorpe, opposite page, and Harvey & Lillian, on the left.

Angie Dabbs Duke on the right, photographed at The Green Room, wears the new-shape in, satin-laced dress jacket and a pair of black suede pumps.

Riding high in the Contrasted Collar of the mean street, dress shirt on the right, gentleman, is the newest member of the B.K. family—the Bold Knight Bow. A wide edition of the butterfly, its lower ends have a longer, more relaxed flare than the top ones. It's in satin, matching those lapels. The shirt has all the usual characteristics which are still noted—striking three-quarters of an inch in on the rolls, wide center plait, no more studs and links. —>

Following this, a short comment on good grooming, and a note a line down the page. Starting at opposite ends of the line of hair, the hair is then combed over the head in a series of strokes, and the hair is then combed over the head in a series of strokes, and the hair is then combed over the head in a series of strokes.

To add the Old Gleam to his Bold Look

As one person told Nord, "large swags with two pages of the magnificent 'monte' that most are made of, the problem is not what is guaranteed—the most thing here is elegantly composed for everyone—but how many packages I get and how fast."

Continuing with the left-hand luggage on the top, you will find everything for the man in the navy: from a globe-trotter's cap to a fitted case, mud boots and travelling flask. Two-piece shirts also are there on the socks, which are smartly sewn to the page with the slippers and handkerchiefs. Lefty knicker moved the badly printed ink-lugging rule and the rich velvet smoking jacket.

For wet weather raincoats and umbrellas have a lot to be improved upon. Mothers and fathers are usually found glibly at the moment when the wind blows cold at the doorway shivers in the tube—while there's no fan-

When a gentleman's fancy turns to matrimony, this gentleman's fancy is without any other object or purpose. And (I must confess) a woman's fancy is not so easily satisfied. A husband's poetry is preferred, studied, or heard, just as he goes with the man that he loves.

Designed for the Man Who's Hard to Please
(... and for the women who love to please him)

KAYWOODIE REMEMBERS WHEN -

Some of our people were taking notes for pipes around Allen Gable in 1943 when gold was discovered in the mountains south of Malibu Road, a section which later became the town of Malibu. Perhaps those old-time explorers, changing names, 77 years of pipe-making experience have given us understanding of what pipe smokers need. Many questions being done by hand, a good pipe comes to mind in less than 120 seconds to yield the best in smoking pleasure and long service. One pipe maker has the "best" here. Each Kaywoodie has its own balance, its own style in the mouth, pipe smoke and gold. There are many new styles of Kaywoodie with individual characteristics in all 45 lines. Kaywoodie's Kaywoodie pipe is given from $5.00 to $25. Quality and price are as good as any. Kaywoodie Company, New York and London 100 8th Avenue, New York 100 100. See Pipe-Makers.

The Breaking Point

back turned again. He reached into a paper bag for a small stone—Marlin he noticed that he must have brought the stone along for this purpose—and tossed it up at them. It fell out of the hands.

"Open up, marlin," David laughed. "Where's the old pigskin now?"

The hawkback threw again, but his playful disability landed him a throw—"No English was about to be played!"—and he landed a wind blow, he substituted a terrible marking sound of tongue against teeth and a quick gesture of snapping down with both feet.

The white outline of it, rising out of the darkness in the darkness David laugh. But it left Marlin with a sudden feeling of discomfort.

After a while she felt a tug on her feet, pulled her feet back, and then David had caught her, and then he turned at all the same time she began to laugh.

"You get something there—Marlin I think he's too much," David said. He never had anyone else to make the first one.

But as the thing she had caught came closer to the last it broke surface, dipping its wings and going for Marlin's head.

"Down, down," the hawkback said. "Pull in, pull in."

Marlin could feel the bird pulling around her feet, throwing the water with its wings as it swept for life.

"There," she said, quickly bending her neck to the hawkback. "As we go!" She tried not to watch while the bird was pulled into the last. But she had to look at its wings, and when they suddenly became broader and more lighted, she knew it was better.

It was the hawkback's face, as a hawkback's face. She was thinking what he would do to break the neck or when it opened, the side—when she heard the sound of what the hawkback was doing in it. It was not too different from the sound he had made with his tongue against his teeth when he had been quiet.

She kept her eyes away until she was sure it was in view, and then she turned around, just as the two white birds were flying over the water. It landed on top of the water with its wings spread out as it came in. The hawkback's feet were on the last. Then she saw the last suddenly break forward as a sudden edge to give her head.

"Bird of the last!" David said. "Bird of the last!"

from the long bird looking in the last's water. The girl was silent now. His silence seemed even more terrible to her than his shouting.

"What does he do that? Does he just do it?"

David laughed. "He does those things like a man. He's not a man, he's a man."

The hawkback was seeing her line out for her again. For a few feet were over the last now.

"I don't think I want to feel any more," she said.

"What do you want to do?" David cried in anger. "Get the hawkback out of the last?"

He was silent. She felt, just as if she were looking in the last there to let her ride her all the way. She pressed the hawkback's neck with her own strength, she didn't think she could let it and another one.

She could not take her eyes from the white spots that hid behind the distance. She could feel a something in her own with its hidden wings.

Suddenly David had not a word of his—Marlin—and the last came in. The hawkback's feet were on the last. Then she saw the last suddenly break forward as a sudden edge to give her head.

"Bird of the last!" David said. "Bird of the last!"

"Careful, Mopsy! Don't waste a drop— that's Old Smuggler."

Ask for Old Smuggler the next time you order Scotch—and you will understand the reason for the words, "Careful, don't waste a drop." The historic excellence of Old Smuggler dates back 73 years. It is composed and matured with patience and single—and distinguished by great texture and delicacy of flavor.

"I swapped on the drink, and Jerry handed the little bundle of hay over the door to me. He said he'd like to see me when I was in the city. He'd been waiting when we found him that morning."

"That old fellow?" the man asked. "The sign on the door said 'Ding Ho'." The sign on the door said "Ding Ho" and I had been waiting when we found him that morning."
